

DIGITAL DESIGN COMMONS

The Digital Design Commons is a newly formed multimedia center on Wesleyan's campus, currently in its second phase of construction. Formerly home to the Davison Art Center, the DDC engages students in creative research and artistic practice across a range of disciplines. Once completed, the DDC will feature a series of production spaces, including a motion capture studio, and several video editing and sound recording suites. Courses offered within the DDC deepen conceptual and technical knowledge of multimedia approaches within a variety of artistic practices. The DDC also offers student-led training and workshops, along with a growing inventory of multimedia equipment.
